Wavelengths

I am not sure of some of the local laws or directives. Now, at the church, we do not have the recycling service. That big blue capped recycling bins are now obsolete for us. I am not sure what the municipal expectation is for such a backwards, unenlightened decision, but our waste bins are much more crammed with stuff.

One of the more laughable arcane thoughts in my mind at 5:30 am while I was shovelling the walkways, was whether or not certain songs should be banned in Midland, (or any snowbelt town, for that matter.) Michael Bublé came through my headphones, singing, "Let it Snow, Let it Snow, Let it Snow". Imagine the scene: yes, it was snowing, but not the delicate kind gently drifting to the ground. Nope, it was those big honking flakes driving sideways and covering the ground, no matter how quickly you scraped the sidewalk. In my mind, I was having a heated conversation with Mr. Bublé, telling him that he did not know what he is talking about!

As I was reaching to toss a shovelful of snow up and over an ever-growing mountain, I reminded him that despite his lyrics of "having no place to go", I had plenty to do, plenty of people to see, and many places to go! I told him enough was enough and we didn't need any more snow until next Christmas. Thankfully, the song switched, but then he began crooning about dreaming of a white Christmas. I scolded him that only people from the west coast, (he is a Vancouver boy) would dream such a preposterous sentiment. Obviously, he has never been in authentic snow and in all likelihood, he had never picked up a shovel in his life!

At that point, I had lost count of how many days in a row the walkways needed to be shovelled. It is a good practice to get it done early in the morning, before the snowplow comes to clean our parking lot, that way all the snow on the sidewalk can be pushed into the lot and those big blades can push it away. At that time, the only vehicles are the myriads of snowplow drivers going here and there, blue lights flashing, plows scraping, the backup beepers chirping. I often wonder if they all meet up at Tim Hortons for a morning breakfast and conversation about crazy stories of plowing. It seems like it would be an interesting community of kindred spirits. I certainly have a new appreciation for the plow guys.

Anyway, back to early morning piles. I purchased a new set of winter boots though to be honest; it is way easier to put my runners on. I also have bought a couple of pairs of gloves, looking for a pair that will keep my hands warm. Haven't found them yet. Now, I keep reminding myself that I have presided at funerals for gentlemen who have had sudden heart attacks doing what I am doing, but I figure as long as it's instant, I'm good. I always empty my bladder before I go out, just in case... But there is one peculiarity that I am finding, despite the aches and pains and stiffness, I feel that something is happening with my back – I think for the first time in my life, I am developing back muscles. If this keeps up, I may be ready for the beach after all, if summer ever arrives.

Happy (?) shovelling,

Fr. Roy
